

ABORTION IS AMORAL

Most Americans will tell you that they are moral people. They “live a moral life”, they “don’t hurt anybody else”. However, most Americans, when discussing the baby in the womb, somehow forget all their morality. Somehow morality, when given to a baby in a womb (that they can’t see), goes out the window. For example, some people ask, “Doesn’t a woman have a right to choose to kill her baby? Doesn’t the government allow for this?” and I would answer, “Doesn’t God have a right to define what is right or wrong?” I wasn’t aware that we could determine our own morality or the length of someone’s life.

Abortion is a convenient excuse for selfish, fornicating, amoral men and women. When you look at abortion from the baby’s perspective, what do you see other than a murder taking place? Pro-Choicers can only see abortion from the woman’s perspective and all they see is their “rights” taken away if they can’t terminate a pregnancy. Since when is anyone free to murder another person? Is the life of another person up for grabs? Is the life of a person a commodity—you know, something to be traded on the NYSE?

The ironic thing is that the baby isn’t asking for any extraneous, outlandish rights; he is just asking for the right to live. Likewise, the people in Uganda or Venezuela would have asked for that same simple, basic right as the baby in the womb. But, tragically, instead, they were denied that right by murderous, amoral and selfish people who had a “choice” to let them live or not.

It’s easy for those who have life to take the lives away from others, isn’t it? It’s easy for those who have power to crush those weaker than them. Just because you can snuff out a life doesn’t mean you should. Morals aren’t based on feelings-in-the-moment. Right and wrong is universal, regardless of circumstances. Governments, likewise are designed (by God) to protect life; not snuff it out. Who needs over-seas terrorists when we kill our own Americans with our laws?

Let me ask you a question: where do morals come from? Are morals something that anyone can make up as they go? Or are morals concrete no matter what? Are morals relative or absolute? The answer lies in God. All things come from Him and because we are made in His image, we know right from wrong. We all have a moral compass. Unfortunately, that moral compass is broken in all of us (as we are all sinners). Morality is something that needs to be constantly fought for. That’s why Pro-Choicers and Pro-Lifers exist; one creates morality (abortion) as it suits them. The other says abortion is wrong regardless.

If everyone has a different view on morality, then who is right? We all can’t be right. Actions are either wrong or right. Hitler said morality was relative and murdering Jews was OK. Other Germans said murdering Jews was wrong. Who’s right? Without God’s Law, morality is a joke. Morality will always be warped and molded to suit ourselves. Abortion can be justified a thousand different ways; but it will never nullify God’s Law. Morality is from Him alone and it never changes.
